The cat (Felis catus) is a domestic species of small carnivorous mammal. It is the only domesticated species in the family Felidae and is often referred to as the domestic cat to distinguish it from the wild members of the family. A cat can either be a house cat, a farm cat or a feral cat; the latter ranges freely and avoids human contact.

Cats are graceful, carnivorous (meat-eating) mammals with sharp teeth and claws. Most kinds of cat prey on other mammals or birds, and most hunt alone at night. Only lions live and hunt in groups. The claws of cats are extended to help grip their prey, but retracted (pulled back) when not in use. Unlike dogs, cats can rotate their paws to grip their victim, so that they can make a quick kill with a bite to the neck.

A clean cat is a happy cat, McMillan says.
“When they are unhappy—which can be from emotional difficulties or ill health—they will typically forego good grooming habits,” he says. “Licking provides an endorphin release like a runner’s high,” Levy adds.

While cats make purr-fect pets for some people, they don't for others. Cats are dependent on their owners for all their needs — food, water, medical attention, exercise, shelter, and, most important, companionship. For many people, the years of unconditional love and devotion they receive from their furry “kids” far outweigh the daily responsibilities. But [...]

Cats often kick with their back legs when angry, and this flap of skin protects your cat from such attacks. Many cats will develop a primordial pouch at some point in their lives and it is not necessarily an indicator of feline obesity. However, excess fat may be stored in your cat's primordial pouch if he is overweight.

Cat coat genetics determine the coloration, pattern, length, and texture of feline fur. Understanding how is challenging because many genes are involved. The variations among cat coats are physical properties and should not be confused with cat breeds. A cat may display the coat of a certain breed without actually being that breed.
